Science is a serious business. Scientific people in white coats doing important things. WRONG! Sometimes you just want to know what animal poos cubes, or how to run across a swimming pool filled with custard. Find the answers to these and other silly questions in this series. Real science can be silly!

- Short entries that can be read in any order
- Index and glossary
- Science does not have to be difficult and serious all the time

If you have ever wondered how big dinosaurs and other prehistoric creatures really were, this is the book for you! Each animal is superimposed on a picture from today in a very realistic and lifelike scene. See a 'terror bird' get caught up in a horse race, or a woolly mammoth come face-to-face with a fire truck.

Pet Library, focusing on the most popular family pets, begins with a look at the history of the species.. Each book then covers the various breeds and their original habitats, body language, intelligence level, instinctive behaviours, means of communication, and history of domestication. With colour photos on every page, readers will thoroughly enjoy reading about their favourite four-legged, winged, or finned family friends.

PICTURE BOOKS

The class is supposed to work in pairs on their maths, but Adelaide misses out. She invents a bear to be her maths buddy and ends up being able to do maths all by herself. A book for children who never get picked to join groups in class, and for those who are scared of maths.

- Examples of simple maths
- Explains the basics of adding and subtracting
- Bright, original illustrations
- To be read to children, but with simple fonts they can try to decipher
